Yeſterday, and not before, a ſufficient Number of our new Repreſentatives met to make a Houſe, when the Hon. Captain Hall, who arrived here the 25th paſt from London, on the 22d, in Lat. 30. 21. Long. 76. 21. met with a Sloop full of Water, no living Creature on board, whoſe Stern was painted green, and Sides yellow. CHARLES-TOWN: Printed by T. POWELL & Co. at the Printing-Office near the EXCHANGE.

NEWS from the Continent of Germany.

IT is ſurpriſing that the important manœuvres, now tranſacting in Poland by the three illuſtrious powers, have not yet rouſed the attention of the other European Potentates, and directed their eyes to ſcenes in which their deareſt intereſts are ſo deeply involved. Arguments enough are not wanting to convince them that the partition of Poland is one of the moſt daring robberies that ever diſgraced the hiſtory of the modern world, and that the three united powers may with equal propriety and juſtice inſiſt on the diviſion of any other European kingdom which they would with to poſſeſs. To underſtand this properly, let us hear their reſpective claims.

The King of Pruſſia, with an effrontery peculiar to himſelf, ſpeaks thus in his manifeſto:—"It is very well known to all thoſe who are verſed in hiſtory, and We have given the moſt inconteſtible proofs of it to the world, that the crown of Poland has for many ages unjuſtly detained from the Dukes of Pomerania, and after them from the houſe of Brandenburg, that part of Pomerania ſituated between the frontiers of that duchy and the rivers Viſtula and Netz, commonly called Pomerellia; as alſo, from the latter in particular, the diſtrict of Great Poland, ſituated between the Drage and the Netz. The Dukes of Pomerania never reſigned their juſt claims to the above poſſeſſions, forcibly wreſted from them; and on their extinction, in 1637, theſe claims rightfully deſcended to their lawful heirs, the Electors of Brandenburg.——As to the diſtrict of Great Poland, ſituated between the Drage and the Netz, it belonged originally to the Marquiſate of Brandenburg, who were the quiet poſſeſſors of it till the fifteenth century, when Sigiſmond (King of Hungary, and Elector of Brandenburg) mortgaged it to the Teutonic Order, from whom it was forcibly taken by the crown of Poland. The Poliſh crown having thus unjuſtly poſſeſſed itſelf of theſe two countries, We neither can nor will ſubmit any longer to the injuſtice; and ſhall therefore, in caſe of any reſiſtance, employ all the power with which Providence has armed us, for the recovery of our ancient rights," &c.

Such is the miraculous reaſoning of this royal chronologiſt, who has here given us a hiſtorical deduction to be found no where but the cabinet of Potſdam. Suffice it only to obſerve, that by the laſt treaty between Poland and Pruſſia, their reſpective limits were ſettled, and ſworn to by the reſpective parties, to be juſt, true, and equal.—But what are treaties to the King of Pruſſia?

The manifeſto of the Emperor of Germany is even leſs ceremonious than that of Pruſſia; for he only tells us briefly, "that he has many ancient claims on the kingdom of Poland." He has very judiciouſly avoided an enumeration of them.

The Empreſs of Ruſſia, leſs ceremonious ſtill, ſets forth no pretenſion at all to her diviſion of the plunder, but that ſhe was frequently diſturbed by the commotions in Poland, and ſhe is willing to put a period to them! Without deſcanting on the novelty of this claim, let us juſt obſerve how ſucceſsfully this lady, who has adopted the politics of Pruſſia, improves upon them.

In the treaty of 1686, between Ruſſia and Poland, theſe two powers guarantied each other reciprocally their dominions.

When the Ruſſian troops entered Poland in 1763, Ruſſia declared to moſt of the courts of Europe, that ſhe would make no conqueſt of, or in Poland herſelf, much leſs permit the other powers ſo to do.

Laſtly, in 1767 and 1768, Ruſſia made a moſt ſolemn treaty of alliance with Poland, of which the following is one article. "The two contracting powers guaranty each other reciprocally, in the moſt ſacred manner, with the trueſt ſincerity, and to all eternity, the poſſeſſion and preſervation of their poſſeſſion in Europe."

After theſe tranſactions, what truſt is to be repoſed in the faith of Princes, or in the ſtipulated honour of nations? If the reſt of Europe beholds theſe perjured plunderers with indifference, they are partakers in their crimes. OLIVER.

CHARACTERS of ſome of the crowned Heads of EUROPE.

THE French Monarch, governed by women from the firſt moment he aſcended the throne, a ſlave to his lubricity, thinking himſelf the firſt of mortals, ſuffers a vile harlot to lead him by the noſe, and diſtribute, at her will, thoſe treaſures gathered from the ſweat of the peaſant's brow. A harlot in France makes Miniſters of ſtate, Archbiſhops, Mareſchaux; and diſpoſes, in ſhort, of all places of truſt or profit, even of the King's Confeſſors. A harlot in France makes laws, breaks Parliaments, forgives criminals, condemns innocents, raiſes villains to the rank of Dukes.—There have been in that nation, which boaſts of having honour for the principle of its government, Princes of the blood ſoliciting favours through the channel of a harlot.—That King, who thinks magnanimity hereditary to the houſe of Bourbon, has, through a ſcruple of conſcience, married another man's wife, while himſelf was married to a virtuous Princeſs, daughter to the beſt of Princes.—Thus, in that country, public money is jaded away, and religion made a farce of.

The King of Pruſſia.——Let a veil, impenetrable to the rays of humanity, for ever cover his memory. To be ſure, he is a great General, ſo were Nero and Caligula; ſo would have been Cartouche and Mandrin, were they born in a higher ſphere.

The Czarina is——a woman: My pen reſpects the weakneſſes of her ſex, or ſhould cenſure her prodigious fondneſs of ſtones. A Princeſs who ſpends 200,000l. for a diamond, while her ſubjects, oppreſſed by the calamities of war, famine, and peſtilence, groan under a yoke the more intolerable, as it is made heavy without neceſſity—ſuch a Princeſs, I ſay, would be inexcuſable, was ſhe more than a woman.

The King of Denmark——puſillanimous, void of penetration, without fortitude or courage—would not be known even for the ſhade of a King, was it not for the gaudy ornaments of royalty which he is ſtill ſuffered to wear.

Guſtavus——No, Meſſrs. Printers, Europe, will not furniſh us with an example of perfidy equal to that of this young Monarch: We muſt tranſport ourſelves into the Seraglio of the Sultans and Sophis; we muſt look into the oldeſt hiſtory, and recall to our minds the tragic ſcenes of Syracuſe, and Nero's reign. Europe has ſeen tyrants of a younger date, but none to be paralielled with him.—Scarce ſat upon a tottering throne; the moment he has ſworn, by all the ties which religion and honour could preſcribe, to govern his people by the laws now eſtabliſhed, unſheathing the bloody ſword of tyranny, and putting it upon his beloved ſubjects throats, he forces them into ſlavery.—Guſtavus, who boaſts of his deſcent from the Goths and Vandals, ſhews all their babarity; Will not his ſubjects ſhew the courage of their anceſtors? They once conquered Rome.—But my heart is repugnant to the taſk.——I muſt finiſh it.
